

INR 2002H Quiz 6True/False

Indicate whether the statement is true (A) or false (B). (5 points each)

- _____ 1. The Israeli army invaded Lebanon in 2006 due to frequent attacks from the al Qaeda terrorist group being launched against Israeli towns.
- _____ 2. While useful in past foreign policy formulation, state bureaucracies are largely irrelevant in today's foreign policy decisions.
- _____ 3. Analyzing the psychological characteristics of leaders can often help us to understand their decisions in ways that rational approaches may not.
- _____ 4. The organizational process model is concerned with the procedures followed by bureaucracies and how those procedures may impact foreign policy concerns.
- _____ 5. The bureaucratic politics model asserts that much of our foreign policy is the result of competing budgetary and power interests inside of the government.
- _____ 6. The Cuban missile crisis almost triggered a nuclear war between the USA and USSR.
- _____ 7. It is generally true that foreign policy experts, while inside a state leader's small group of advisors, feel free to challenge their counterpart's views on important policy questions.
- _____ 8. Standard operating procedures are commonly used in large bureaucracies to help manage large amounts of information.
- _____ 9. Unmotivated bias results from our attempt to simplify the process of analyzing and understanding the large amounts of information related to our complicated world.
- _____ 10. Motivated bias results from emotional or psychological needs that drive how we analyze and interpret data.
- _____ 11. Cognitive dissonance results once we have reached an emotionally satisfying conclusion to our analysis of a given issue or problem.
- _____ 12. Attribution often leads to unmotivated bias.
- _____ 13. Prospect theory holds that individuals are more likely to focus on possible gains than possible losses.
- _____ 14. Bolstering leads to decision making that is not based on possible pros or cons or the evaluation of all sides of an issue.
- _____ 15. Expected utility theory holds that policy makers measure the payoffs and probability of actions before making their decisions.
- _____ 16. Catherine MacKinnon's writings on feminism tie male domination to the power of the state.
- _____ 17. J. Ann Tickner's focus on the international system deals with the role of the invisibility of women from the study of international relations.